EMPLOYMENT

2014 – Present: Matthew Calbraith Perry Assistant Curator of Economic Botany and Caribbean Program Director, Institute of Economic Botany, The New York Botanical Garden, New York

I direct the Latino and Caribbean Ethnomedicine Program, a research and training program that aims to investigate and compare the uses of medicinal plants for healthcare among Latino and Caribbean communities (Dominicans, Puerto Ricans, Mexicans, Jamaicans) living in New York City and in their countries of origin (where research includes wild edible plants for food and other cultural uses). The program also looks into these communities' beliefs about cultural illnesses (“folk illnesses”) that are understudied in mainstream biomedicine. Research results are applied to develop curricular materials for medical education and to train the next generation of healthcare providers in improved cultural sensitivity during the clinical encounter.

2010 – 2014: Ethnomedical Research Specialist, Institute of Economic Botany, The New York Botanical Garden, New York

Projects directed: Improving Healthcare for Underserved Immigrant Latino Communities in New York City (The Aetna Foundation, The Cigna Foundation), Cultural Competency Training for Health Care Professionals in Latino Ethnomedical Systems in New York City (The United Hospital Fund); Dominican Ethnomedicine and Culturally Effective Health Care in New York City (The Jacob and Valeria Langeloth Foundation) and Dominican Traditional Medicine for Urban Community Health (National Institutes of Health/NCCAM).

2005 – 2010: Postdoctoral Research Associate, Institute of Economic Botany, The New York Botanical Garden, New York

Projects directed: Dominican Ethnomedicine and Culturally Effective Health Care in New York City (The Jacob and Valeria Langeloth Foundation) and Dominican Traditional Medicine for Urban Community Health (NIH/NCCAM).

The Dominican Urban Ethnomedicine Project at the IEB was an interdisciplinary project funded by the National Institutes of Health/National Center for Complementary and Alternative Medicine (NIH/NCCAM) (PI: Dr. Michael J. Balick; Grant # R21 AT001889) to document the plants used for common health conditions by Dominican immigrants in New York City. The main research question was: “What happens with medicinal plant knowledge and use when people migrate from the Dominican Republic to New York City and they are faced with new living conditions in a different natural environment?” The results showed that, contrary to what was expected, medicinal plant knowledge was not lost, but actively transformed in this community and the importance of foods as medicines increased after migration.

2000 – 2002: Postdoctoral Research Associate, Ghent University, Belgium

Lead researcher on a project funded by the Belgian government: Medicinal Plant Explorations in the Andes and Amazon Regions of Bolivia: Ethnographic and ethnobotanical research was conducted in a traditional farming community in the Andes and in indigenous communities in the Amazon in Bolivia. The results demonstrated that knowledge held by traditional healers about medicinal plants can also be high in an environment such as the Andes that is significantly affected by human activity and is less diverse as compared to the tropical rainforest. In the Amazon, knowledge about medicinal plants was inversely related to the use of pharmaceutical products and to distance from Western primary healthcare services.

1997 – 1998: Research Associate, Neuropharmacology Department, UCB Pharma, Belgium

Neuropharmacology research into animals models of depression and epilepsy

1991 – 1995: Graduate student, Faculty of Medicine and Health Sciences, Ghent University, Belgium

Research into the neuropharmacological background of stereotyped animal behavior induced by captivity in a rodent species (the bank vole: Myodes glareolus)
