Kids Discover Orchid Origins of Vanilla and More
During The Orchid Show's Complementary Children's Program
*Chocolate and Vanilla Adventures

February 6–April 11, 2010

During Chocolate and Vanilla Adventures in the Everett Children's Adventure Garden, children learn the plant origins of two sweet treats. This interactive program is a family favorite and a wonderful accompaniment to The Orchid Show: Cuba in Flower, which opens to the public on February 27 at The New York Botanical Garden.

Through the activities of Chocolate and Vanilla Adventures, children discover that vanilla comes from the seedpod of an orchid plant called Vanilla planifolia. They also learn that this plant relies on a tiny bee for pollination. Youngsters examine vanilla beans with hand lenses and microscopes and observe live vanilla orchids. Ultimately, their senses are rewarded as they enjoy the heavenly scent of fresh vanilla and taste vanilla-flavored products.

The whole family can explore the fascinating origins of chocolate and the great cacao tree, Theobroma cacao, or "food of the gods." As kids tickle their taste buds with hot chocolate made from a Mayan recipe, they discover that the ancient beverage is quite different from the hot chocolate of today. Children grind and taste real chocolate seeds and add spices like chili powder, cinnamon, and vanilla to make a special recipe. They also learn Mayan hieroglyphs for "chocolate" and "vanilla" and record all their findings in field notebooks.

Chocolate and Vanilla Adventures will be open to the public February 6 to April 11. Hours are Tuesdays through Fridays, 1:30–5:30 p.m., and Saturdays and Sundays, 10 a.m.–5:30 p.m. (Note: Ending times are an hour earlier February 6–25.)

The Everett Children's Adventure Garden is a 12-acre indoor/outdoor museum where children discover plant science through fun, hands-on, and engaging educational programs. Interactive exhibits convey different plant science concepts. Playful elements such as topiaries and mazes capture children's imaginations and create an atmosphere of exploration and fun.
